LOCAL MAN'S BRAVERY REWARDED

George Reeder, 63, of Watchet in Somerset, U.K., has been given a certificate of bravery for saving the life of a six-month-old baby.

when he heard a noise that caught his attention. On the other side of the harbor, some people were pointing and shouting, so he rode his bike over as fast as he could.

Mr. Reeder expected to see a dog in the water, but instead he saw a baby's stroller in about four meters of freezing cold water. A woman was screaming desperately – her six-month-old baby boy was strapped into the stroller and was in the water. The strong wind had blown the stroller into the ocean. Mr. Reeder quickly decided to do something.

"I went over and saw that the stroller was upside-down ... and I jumped in," said Mr. Reeder. He pulled the stroller over to the harbor wall. Some other people helped to tie a rope to the stroller, and they managed to pull it out of the water and to safety, but not before the baby had spent around five minutes in the ocean.

Tanya Allen, a passerby (who, fortunately, was a nurse), gave the baby CPR and was able to get him to breathe again. Mr. Reeder remembered seeing a little bit of breath coming out of the baby's mouth. "I thought, he's all right. He's alive.

Fantastic!" he said. Then an air ambulance helicopter arrived, and the baby was taken to the hospital. Mr. Reeder said it was incredible that the baby survived. "It's such a miracle," Mr. Reeder added.

After he'd finished helping the baby and the helicopter had gone, Mr. Reeder went home to recover from the experience. The child's grandfather knew Mr. Reeder and, a little later, went to his house to tell him that the boy was out of danger. Mr. Reeder was very relieved and happy to hear that.

It was a cold and windy morning in Watchet in January 2013. The local harbor master, George Reeder, was doing his regular duties

Mr. Reeder said that he hadn't really been brave. "It was everyone, from Tanya doing the CPR to the helicopter pilot," he said. "I'm just glad I could help." But when Mr. Reeder got the certificate, a council spokesperson said that what he'd done was very courageous. "This was an extremely brave act, since he put his own life at risk." The council has advised local people to avoid walking along the waterfront in very windy weather.
